

Emotional Processing Therapy for Post Traumatic Stress Disorder

Dr Roger Baker, Professor of Clinical Psychology, Bournemouth University

Friday 26 October 2018

Horizon Leeds, Brewery Wharf, Kendell Street, Leeds, LS10 1JR
9am Registration, 9.30am Welcome and 4.30pm, Close

Using a mixture of teaching, skills training, role play, discussion and exploring case studies, this workshop will explore what an emotional processing style is and how this is relevant to the development and presentation of PTSD. You will be shown how to assess emotional processing style and use a range of emotional processing techniques to improve the efficacy of therapy.

The workshop will help you to conceptualise emotional aspects of your therapy more effectively, and incorporate new emotional elements into your approach to therapy. You will also learn to understand your own emotional processing style better and normalise the therapy process, making it more accessible and acceptable to patients. In particular it helps patients understand and welcome exposure based therapies, which can often be regarded as punitive.

This course aims to provide delegates with:

- The understanding of how to conceptualise emotional processing aspects of therapy
- Learning how to assess emotional processing style
- The ability to practice Emotional Processing Therapy skills

About our speaker:

Roger Baker has worked in a dual role as researcher and Clinical Psychologist at Leeds, Aberdeen and Bournemouth Universities and in National Health Service Trusts specialising in Mental Health. He is Professor of Clinical Psychology at Bournemouth University and formerly Consultant Clinical Psychologist in the National Health Service. He has specialised in the development of new emotion based therapies and assessments summarised in 3 books, 'Understanding Panic Attacks and Overcoming Fear' (now in its 3rd edition), 'Emotional Processing: healing through feeling' and 'Understanding Trauma: how to overcome Post Traumatic Stress'. The Emotional Processing Scale, a new way of assessing emotional processing for research and therapy, was published in 2015, and has been translated and used in research in 18 different languages.
