

Visible students/invisible needs: Widening Participation research, policy and practice

Fair Access Research invite all faculties to a workshop in which the different needs of students will be made visible

DATE: 11 July 2016 TIME: 10am—2pm VENUE: EBC 202 & 203

Refreshments and lunch provided

Over the course of the day we will share with you findings from Bournemouth University's Fair Access Research project and explore ways to embed widening participation into your practice at a faculty level.

WHAT WE KNOW:

- Some groups of students are more likely to leave university early. This costs students, university and society millions of pounds each year
- Some groups of students do not feel like that belong at university. Feeling marginalised has a big impact on students' attainment and degree outcomes
- The proposals for the changes in HE (TEF) highlight the importance of widening participation for your teaching practice

Through debates, group activities and an exhibition of posters, we seek to build a community of practice in the area of education and student diversity.

SUBU will be sharing their work to #liberatemycurriculum

This event is open to all academics and professional service staff interested in these issues.
